Interdisciplinary Symposium: Women in Medicine, Women of Medicine

Throughout the history of Western medicine, women's positions in medical and health practice have been precarious, both as practitioners and patients. Traditionally, women have been excluded from the medical profession, and as patients, women's bodies have been treated as pathological, with most anatomical models and clinical control trials casting the male body as normal. This interdisciplinary symposium will focus on historical and contemporary women in and of medicine. The wide array of speakers and respondents will discuss topics such as female professionalism, women in mental health care, women in sexology, anatomical modelling, the history of midwifery, and women's bodies in sports.

Confirmed Speakers and Respondents: Katie Sutton, Paula Michaels, Elizabeth Stephens, Lisa Featherstone, Andrea Josipovic, Rebecca Olive, Jenny Setchell, Rebecca Olson & Karin Sellberg
